

$9 Million Question:

AG Candidates Ask: Are You For the People? Or Against Pedophiles?

Texas voters definitely have a choice in this November's attorney general race—although few of them may be aware of it. Nonetheless they can expect to hear soon from the incumbent Republican. Attorney General Greg Abbott has raised almost $9 million since his 2002 election. Although he still retained $7 million in his war chest at the end of June, Abbott pledged to spend heavily to ensure that voters know about his accomplishments. At the top of his list, he says, is busting Internet pedophiles.

Starting Two Years Earlier, Abbott Raised 83 Times More Money Than Van Os...

Election Cycle	Total Contributions To Abbott	No. of Contributions To Abbott
2004	$3,985,473	1,781
2006	$4,749,806	1,918
TOTAL:	$8,733,279	3,699

Election Cycle	Total Contributions To Van Os	No. of Contributions To Van Os
2004	NA	NA
2006	$104,081	912
TOTAL:	$104,081	912

Note: Libertarian candidate Jon Roland has not reported raising or spending any money.

...And Has 2,177 Times As Much In the Bank

Meanwhile voters should not expect to hear from Democratic challenger David Van Os—unless they mosey down to their local court house on the appointed day. A longtime labor lawyer, Van Os is running a populist campaign—and has the bank account to prove it. Since his failed 2004 race for the Texas Supreme Court, Van Os has raised $104,081, spending all but $3,242 of it by the end of June. Unable to buy much advertising, Van Os is well on his way to fulfilling his pledge to hold political rallies at each of Texas' 254 county courthouses. Here Van Os rails more often against the kinds of rapacious corporate interests that have stocked his opponent's war chest than the perverts who populate the World Wide Web. Libertarian Jon Roland, who has not reported raising or spending any money, says his priority will be to squash the corruption of public offices.

Apart from message and the sheer size of their war chests, a key difference between the two major-party candidates is in the size of the contribution checks that they received. Checks of $5,000 or more accounted for 75 percent of all the money that Abbott raised and just 19 percent of Van Os' total funding. In contrast, checks for less than $1,000 accounted for 57 percent of Van Os' money and 5 percent of the incumbent's cash.

Researchers identified the interests behind more than $8 million of Abbott's campaign money, finding that business interests accounted for more than 99 percent of his total. Abbott, an ex-Texas Supreme Court justice and former corporate lawyer, received the most money ($1.4 million) from the Lawyers and Lobbyists sector (led by Vinson & Elkins). He also received more than $1 million from the Miscellaneous Business sector (led by Houston beer magnate John Nau). Abbott's top overall donor was, of course, Houston home-builder Bob Perry, who gave the attorney general a remarkable $470,265. The next-largest donors were Kenny Troutt, who made a fortune from his Excel phone company, and energy and water investor T. Boone Pickens.

Researchers identified the interests behind just $36,290 of Van Os' campaign money. This was because he relied much more on harder-to-identify small donors and because his campaign did a poor job of identifying the occupation and employer of even some of its top donors (e.g reporting one $2,000 donor as nothing more than a "Political Action Committee"). Labor unions are Van Os' top source of support. Two of his top donors are unions that previously employed this candidate: the Communications Workers of America and the AFL-CIO. While Abbott received a negligible share of his money from unions, the absolute amount that he received from labor ($15,900) almost rivals what Van Os obtained from this sector ($18,800).
