Bills Facilitate Locking Up Immigrant Families, Kids

Private Prisons Pay 10 Texas Lobbyists Up to $480,000. Industry Gave Texas Politicians $225,205.

o circumvent judicial rulings against holding immigrant children in detention centers, Orwellian Texas lawmakers are considering a bill that would license detention centers as child-care facilities.

The identical SB 1018 and HB 2225 would allow for prolonged detentions of immigrant families and children in for-profit family detention camps. The Obama administration expanded such detentions, which the Trump administration is accelerating. With recent immigrant raids in Austin, Waco and Laredo, U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) has a record 41,000 people locked up—with more than 70 percent held by private contractors. The industry also could get a boost from SB 4's crack down on "sanctuary cities" that do not honor voluntary and legally questionable immigration detainers.

The legislation is a gift to private prison giants GEO Group and CoreCivic (previously Corrections Corporation of America). They operate two Texas family detention centers: the South Texas Family Residential Center in Dilley (CoreCivic) and Karnes County Residential Center in Karnes City (GEO).

With competitor Management & Training Corp. and Williams Scotsman, which leases the Dilley detention facilities to CoreCivic, private prison interests currently are paying 10 lobbyists up to $480,000 to lobby Texas officials. The up to $320,000 that GEO group is paying five Texas lobbyists accounts for two-thirds of this tab. Longtime top GEO lobbyist Lionel Aguirre represents the company in both Austin and Washington. Weeks before Trump's election, GEO's federal lobby team also retained two former aides of Alabama Sen. Jeff Sessions, the new attorney general.

Data obtained by activists show that immigrants held in privately run detention centers make more calls to a federal hotline for complaints about physical and sexual assaults than do immigrants held in facilities directly overseen by ICE. In one case, four witnesses reportedly saw another detainee rape Douglas Menjivar at the GEO-run Joe Corley Detention Center in Conroe in September 2013. Many people, including child-welfare advocates and medical professionals, testified against SB 1018 and HB 2225 in the legislature. Only GEO and one woman representing herself testified in favor.

President Trump has a more favorable view on private lock ups. "With prisons I do think we can do a lot of privatizations and private prisons," he said on the campaign trail. "It seems to work a lot better." Private prison stock prices have doubled since Trump rode his anti-immigrant message to an upset victory in November.²

GEO recently announced that it landed a $110 million federal contract to build a new immigrant detention center next to the existing Joe Corley Detention Center in Conroe. Both facilities will be in the district of Sen. Brandon Creighton. The $6,000 that Creighton collected from GEO in recent years makes him that industry's No. 2 rank-and-file lawmaker after Senate Criminal Justice Committee Chair John Whitmire.

PACs and executives affiliated with GEO Group, CoreCivic and prison health company Correct Care Solutions gave Texas politicians more than $225,205 since 2013. The politicians capturing the biggest share of this prison cash were Gov. Greg Abbott ($55,000), Senate Criminal Justice Committee Chair John Whitmire ($25,000), and Lt. Gov. Dan Patrick ($12,500). Private prison interests also gave at least $10,000 apiece to several Republican leadership groups and to the Texas Legislative Black Caucus.

Some Texas officials who openly question the value of spending state funds on mass incarceration are more receptive to the practice when it's done on Uncle Sam's dime. The head judges of the state's highest criminal and civil courts recently endorsed a bail-reform bill (SB 1338). They argued that we needlessly spend $1 billion a year to lock up indigent, minority defendants who pose no public threat. Yet lawmakers seem intent on expanding indefinite detentions of Central American families fleeing violence—provided that it's billed to federal taxpayers. Meanwhile, a bill to keep juveniles out of privately owned or operated detention centers has yet to get a hearing (HB 3325).
