Rigged:

The Oil and Gas Industry Bankrolls Its Own Regulators

"This whole election is being rigged." -The Donald Trump

The three sitting members of the misnamed Texas Railroad Commission conservatively took 60 percent of the more than $11 million that they raised in recent years from the oil and gas industry that they regulate. The No. 2 source of political funding for these commissioners was the Lawyers & Lobbyists sector, which accounts for another 7 percent of the commissioners' cash. With many of these attorneys representing clients before the agency, the two industries pressing the most business before the commissioners supply 67 percent of their funding. Oil and gas interests alone also supplied 65 percent of the money reported by the candidate most likely to win this week's Railroad Commission race.

Money Raised by Current Commissioners (Since January 2010)

Commissioner (Party)	Year Elected	Itemized Contributions	Oil & Gas Amount	Oil & Gas Percent	Fundraising Period
Christi Craddick (R)	2012	$4,874,193	$2,712,424	56%	7/2011 thru 6/2016
Ryan Sitton (R)	2014	$3,688,668	$2,166,202	59%	9/2013 thru 6/2016
David Porter (R)	2010	$2,558,551	$1,749,176	68%	1/2010 thru 6/2016
	TOTALS	$11,121,412	$6,627,802	60%

This report analyzes the itemized campaign contributions of the three sitting commissioners and the four 2016 finalists seeking the seat of retiring Commissioner David Porter. Where appropriate, this study tracks money raised as far back as 2010, when Porter first ran for his seat. Long a major player in Texas politics, the energy industry has an especially outsized role in bankrolling its own regulators. During the 2014 cycle, the energy industry accounted for 17 cents of every dollar raised by Texas' non-judicial state candidates. During that gubernatorial election cycle, Governor Greg Abbott raised more than $45 million—taking 22 percent of it from oil and gas interests. That industry clearly secured a major voice in the Governor's Mansion. Yet Republican Wayne Christian, who is favored to win retiring Commissioner David Porter's seat in several days, is three times more dependent on the oil and gas industry than Abbott (this study also includes money that Christian raised for the 2014 race that he lost to Commissioner Ryan Sitton). When an industry pays 56-65 percent of its regulator's prodigious political bills, there's no dodging the question: Who's regulating whom?

Money Raised by Surviving 2016 Candidates Seeking David Porter's Open Seat

Candidate (Party)	Itemized Contributions	Oil & Gas Amount	Oil & Gas Percent	Fundraising Period
'Wayne' Christian (R)	$1,019,638	$664,975	65%	9/2013 thru 9/2016
Mark Miller (L)	$100,042	$1,050	1%	6/2014 thru 9/2016
Martina Salinas (G)	$3,831	$0	0%	6/2014 thru 9/2016
Grady Yarbrough (D)	$0	$0	NA	7/2015 thru 9/2016
TOTALS	$1,123,511	$666,025	59%

The table on the following page further illustrates the industry's grip on the agency. It lists 41 top contributors to the seven Railroad Commission candidates analyzed here. Note that just eight of these donors (20 percent) are not ostensibly regulated by the commission. Yet even several of the big donors classified in other industries also have oil running through their veins. The campaign of state Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, became this study's No. 1 contributor by spending $625,937 to help daughter Christi Craddick win a 2012 Railroad Commission race. Although not classified in the energy industry, Tom Craddick worked for an oil-supply company, represents an energy district and tapped that industry for 35 percent of his political funding. The law firm Parsley Coffin Renner also invested almost $100,000 in Railroad Commission candidates. That firm specializes in representing energy clients before the Public Utility Commission and the Railroad Commission.

Note: Above contributors gave $4,941,854, or 40 percent of what the seven politicians raised.

By contrast, petroleum engineer and Libertarian candidate Mark Miller, whom several newspapers are endorsing as the most qualified current candidate, took just 1 percent of his $100,000 war chest from oil and gas interests. Miller's top support comes from Libertarian-leaning tech contributors.

Industry domination is not the Railroad Commission's only chronic, serious problem. Another is that voters select the leaders of this low profile yet powerful and misnamed agency. The Railroad Commission's 1891 founder, populist Governor Jim Hogg, specifically put it under the direction of gubernatorial appointees for fear that wealthy railroad barons would buy too much influence with elected commissioners. Three years later, lawmakers turned the commission into the elected office that Hogg rejected. As the agency's role morphed from overseeing railroads to regulating the energy industry, the industry bankrolling the commissioners changed—but the agency's name didn't. As a result, commissioners are picked by voters who think the agency does something with trains. These confused voters base their selections on little more than party labels and candidate names.

Voter reliance on candidate names can be disconcerting. By besting two better-funded candidates in the 2016 Democratic primary, Grady Yarbrough fed rumors that voters simply associated his surname with that of the late populist Democratic Congressman Ralph Yarbrough. Similarly, some insiders wondered if Railroad Commission staff scientist Lance Christian was recruited to run in the GOP primary to sow confusion and drain support from Wayne Christian (Gary Gates beat Wayne Christian by 9 percentage points in the seven-person primary only to narrowly lose the two-man runoff to Wayne Christian). Many observers also believe that ethnic bias led GOP primary voters to replace incumbent Commissioner Victor Carrillo in 2010 with now-retiring Commissioner David Porter. Is this any way to run a railroad?

The ordinary voters who elect the commissioners have a negligible role in bankrolling their campaigns. More than 90 percent of the money raised by the three sitting commissioners and by frontrunner Wayne Christian came in checks of $1,000 or more. Horse-choking checks of $10,000 or more accounted for anywhere from one-third to two-thirds of the money that these four politicians raised.

These structural problems have given the Railroad Commission bad marks with the Texas Sunset Advisory Commission. It typically reviews state agencies every 12 years to determine if they return good taxpayer value, need reform or should be abolished altogether. The Railroad Commission has received such poor reviews that it is currently undergoing its third Sunset review since 2010. The latest Sunset staff report again slams the agency's deceptive name, calling for its rechristening as the "Texas Energy Resources Commission." It also suggests that the agency's case hearings and gas-utility rate cases could be done more professionally and transparently by the State Office of Administrative Hearings and the Public Utility Commission, respectively. Sunset staff argue that spinning off these functions would allow the commission to focus scarce resources on core functions such as enforcement, plugging abandoned wells and ensuring pipeline safety.

The 2013 Sunset staff report was even harder hitting. It recommended that commissioners be banned from taking money from parties involved in the agency's contested cases. It said that commissioners should just raise money during an 18-month period surrounding an election (instead of throughout most of their six-year terms). That report also recommended that commissioners be forced to immediately resign to run for another office and that the agency develop rules to prevent informal, ex parte discussions of contested cases. The staff's more modest proposals this round may reflect an implicit recognition that the lawmakers charged with reforming the agency are themselves subject to considerable industry pressure. Indeed, many of the 10 lawmakers reviewing the latest Sunset staff report at an August hearing took the Sunset staff to task for criticizing the agency. "Oil and gas industry is the heart and soul of the state of Texas," said Republican Rep. Dan Flynn. "And for us to go and attack an agency that's done a pretty good job, it just doesn't make sense to me."

In his classic 1981 study,² University of Texas professor David Prindle analyzed contributions to the six men who won 12 Railroad Commission elections from 1962 through 1978. Just looking at checks of $500 or more, Prindle found that the commissioners raised a total of $976,813 to win those 12 races (a now-quaint average of $81,400 per victory). The oil and gas industry supplied 69 percent of that total. Prindle concluded that the industry selected its regulators by ensuring that their candidates typically had 20 times more money than the combined totals of their opponents. Financial supremacy, he concluded, let industry candidates buy decisive name recognition in a low-profile, statewide race. Two major changes have occurred since Prindle published. First, the amounts of money involved have skyrocketed. Second, in Prindle's day the Democratic nominee always won, whereas in recent decades Republican nominees always prevail.³ Texas can do much better.
